Your God Given Promises Must Resurrect

By Nathan D. Pietsch

In the month of April, I shared a Bible teaching from Hebrews 11:11. This verse speaks about how Sarah bore a child named Isaac even though she was passed the biological ability to birth a baby. As I studied Genesis chapters 12-18, I was able to see how God performed the miraculous in Abraham and Sarah's life.

God gave the couple the promise of a child on three different occasions. We see Abraham's first encounter with the Lord regarding the promise in Genesis 12. The word is confirmed again in Genesis 15, and for the third time in Genesis 17. The promise was first given to Abraham when he was 75 years old and Sarah 65 years old. However, the problem was that Sarah was barren. When the miracle finally occurred, and the promised child was birthed, Abraham was 100 years old and Sarah 90. There was a 25 year gap between the revelation of the promise and the fulfillment of the promise.

Numerous people have spoken to me over the years about how God gave them a promise, but it hasn't come to pass. I believe God wants to resurrect the promises He has given you. Many people have lost hope and have grown weary while God's promises have delayed. I want to encourage you to keep holding onto the "baby" the Lord has spoken to you about. Perhaps the Lord gave you a book to write or business idea and you feel you are past your prime to give birth. Take heart in the words found in Genesis 18:14a, "Is anything too hard for the Lord?" Your promise might seem dead, but God is able to resurrect it and bring it to pass.
