Healing the Brokenhearted

By Nathan D. Pietsch

Each month Dawn and I pray for people from around the world through Zoom, phone, or face-to-face. We don't often talk about these prayer sessions because they consist of deep emotional healing and the expulsion of demons. However, this month after we prayed for a person, a nerve was struck on the inside of me.

Dawn and I prayed for a woman who has been a Christian for over 40 years. She is part of a worship team and has been very active in her church community for decades. After prayer, one of her comments was, "I have had many people pray for me over the years. Nobody else saw what you saw. I didn't know this stuff was connected to me..." In another message she said, "Thanks for praying for me. I never heard of soul wounds till now."

It was this last phrase that struck a nerve on my insides. This woman has been active in churches for 40 years and she had never heard of soul wounds before. My question is, "What are churches doing to help people heal of emotional traumas or abuse?" I would say, "Not a lot." The Scriptures state, "He [God] heals the brokenhearted and binds up their wounds.(Psalm 147:3)." Jesus also said, "...He [God] has sent Me to heal the brokenhearted... (Luke 4:18d).

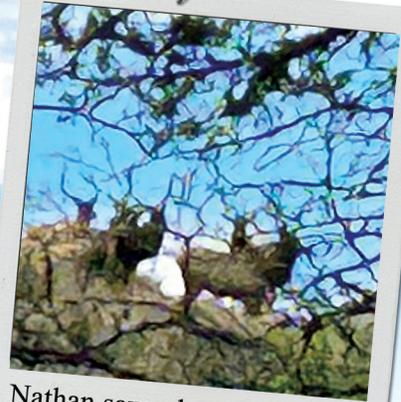

It is time for you to receive the emotional healing that Jesus has purchased for you. Dawn and I lead conferences and seminars to help the brokenhearted receive wholeness. Contact us and let's get something scheduled.
